7(Never before published.) To the Heroes of America.

BY JOSEPH ROIMAN DRAKE. Oh, hall to the heroes whose deads have restored Our honor unsullied once more,
And the blaze of their valor triumphantly poured
On the field that was darkened before!
For hid from our view was fair Victory's form,
And the heavens were shrouded in wrath.
Till the sons of the battle, like stars of the storm, Arose on the desolate path.

Then plums thy dark piniou, proud bird of the North!

And sweep from thy home in the skies,
On the wings of the whirlwieg, exultingly forth,
To the plain where thine enemy dies.
And joy theo, my country! thy stains are effaced,
The pride of the boaster is low.
And the deep sullied standard by cowards disgraced,

Is washed in the gore of the fee. And thou, starry banner! look proudly again You do who re leamed thee from shame, Nor darken thy beam though it fall on the slain, Who repose on the death bed of lame; For the halo that circles the tombs of the brave,

Its lustre unfading maintains,
The sue of their boing may set in the grave,
The light of their glory remains.

TESTING THE STATES' RIGHTS DOOTRINE. of the State (as they are plessed to designate the party to which they are attached,) are in State as assumed by her constituted authorities; and are, many of them, even in the ar-Confederate States, might appear strange to of his military organization: those who are accustemed to place confidence a professions of their fellow men, were it not that this whole effort to break up the Government, from its inception to the present moment, is based upon error, missepresentation, falsehood and hypocrisy. Long meditated by the leaders of the reballion, who were fortunate in finding willing instruments in positions of power during the Administration of Mr. Buchanan, to aid them in their purposes, they were enabled by the base conduct of these mon to acquire a stare in their treasonable designs which gave to their schowe a prestige of etrength and a prospect of euccess which it could never otherwise have received. But what we now desire at this time is to bring to the public attention the miserable attitude in which the Secessionists of the State, who justify the invasion of Kentucky by the Confederate forces, and more especially those who have united in the invasion, have placed them-Ivus. Assuming all along to be Simonfullest extent the doctrine of "State sovof a Stee to regulate its external as well as its internal relations and policy; that, whenever Kentucky so announced her position, no matter what it might be, it was the duty of and cit sons to yield implicit obedience; and Kentucky, by the only power possessed of authoring to act in the premises, having long and how strepuously advocated by them, if it offers an obstacle to their designe; and impelled by the one controlling idez-an idea involving treason to the Government-

But, in order that our readers may see in what light the leaders of this Secession Sevemont in Kentucky are viewed by calm, dispassionate men elsewhere, we present them the annexed article from that model ogether the enunciated sentiments of three band of "States' Rights" men, who are now State the theatre of such a strife as all of condoinn; and the extracts which it reproduces upon Jolin C. Breckinridge, Simon B. Buckuer and Poger W. Hanson will show how little confidence is to he placed in men, who, resolved on treason, are yet all the while striving to convince the people that ey are marvellous proper patriots. When sontiments produced, were attered by these men, they were stimulated with the Kentucky to follow their counsels and take from the robbers. The sufferings and prith plurgs into revolution for which they were so solicitous, although exceedingly cantious about arowing their purpose. So soon however, as all hope of manipulating the houest and patriotic masses of the State to their revolutionary ends failed, they at once threw off the flimsy veil of hypocrisy under which they had attempted to cover themselves; and starting off under cover of midnight darkness to their country's enemies, they placed themselves at the head of the invaders of the Commonwealth, and are now threatening ruin and desolation to the hitherto peaceful coil of Kentucky, simply to gratify an unholy lust for power and an insane desire for fame.

But to the extracts; and we begille reader sote the language of these States' Rights hrawlers, while attempting to wheelle a too confiding people, and contrast it with the infamous position which they now occupy as public enemies:
